Profits of Farming.

The Massachusetts Plouphmon says: "Under the head of "Does Farming Pay?" s few weeks ago, we called attention to the advertisement of Mr. Duren, of Woburn, stating that having acquired a competence by farming, he desired to dispose of ed Mr. D. to give us some account of Staple and Fancy Groceries, his farm. In that article we requesthis mode of operations that we might lay before our readers. We are now happy to be able to present some TOBACCO, CIGARS, &c., &c. commonsense and well considered remarks of his, not only in regard to his own farming, but also in relation to farming in general, which we think will be read with interest."—

We copy the most important parts

GALLIPOLIS, Office Galli of the communication:

The surest, most reliable and most important crop of the farm is the grass. Out of grass and nature's own crucibles come meat and milk, and cheese, the more enduring form of milk; boots, shoes, clothing, the very foundation of existence; and he who makes two spears grow where but one grew before is certainly a benefactor to the race, in his way. Within the last fitteen years I pre same I have raised and sold from twelve to fifteen hundred dollars worth of Swedes turnips, but question whether I am any richer for it. I think I could have raised as many dollars worth of corn and fodder, which would have returned manure to repeat the process; and turnips make heavy drafts upon land. have also dabbled some in other sauce, but found dabbling did not pay; first it interferes with milk raising, taking invaluable hay time; and secondly, you are not apt to raise enough to get a good run of trade, and, therefore the best price. Fruit and eider I have sold considerable of, never I think more than one hundred and fifty barrels of apples in one year. But when they are plenty they net but little above expenses; half a crop generally pays as well as a full one, by bringing better price, At best you get a crop only every second year; and if one fails, you have lost three years use of your land, besides expenses, if you cultivate. So I put my orcharding to grass some four years since, and am sure of two crops yearly as the rain Oil. Oil, is to fall. Of course one would raise fruit and sauce enough for his family, or try, and would often have a little to sell. These ideas apply perhaps only to my personal taste, or peculiar soil on which I am situated, or Lamps, more surely, it may be, to the proper milk raising distance from market Nearer the cities, where land is very precious, sauce and small fruits must Soap and Candles. be the only paying thing; and farther into the country, where land is cheap stock, butter and cheese, fruit and grain, are things, as being not so perishable, easily transported and Indigo, pleanty of land to draw from. Another consideration is, grass and milk are produced with much less labor than other kinds of farm ing, quite an item in these times .--One man can very comfortably take soda. care of fifteen or twenty head of cattie, spread the manure and plant three or four acres of corn with only a few days help, except during the hay season. Some of the time during the war I had a man only three months in the year, but wouldn't advise being too much alone. If you can get good company life is run on a higher plane. Jostling each other is fruitful of ideas, and ideas are vastly more pleasurable than whiskey; souls are made of them.

I have had a light run of grape fever, but been pretty cautious not to devote too much time and territorty to them; planting them about walls, buildings, etc., to determine Wooden Ware. the kinds that succeed best and their profit.

Of swine, I used to keep quite a number ten or twelve years ago, but realized no profit except in manure, and of all that I know of, having kept a strict account of them, only one man made above expenses, seventy-five cents, throwing in the refuse of his table at that. I do not care for them as food, not that I have any prejudice, or think we would be sharper than a Jew without them. I "could eat a raw rat if manners were in questlon," as well as Thoreau, I'm confident. I used to For Plasters Builders etc. let cattle run over the mowing in the fall, but have done with that as far as may be; especially are they injurious to moist and meadow land .-Think of the pressure of four hun dred pounds or more in the small space of an animal's hoof all over the ground. The soil can't acrate under that. I wouldn't have a hoof on meadow land if I could help it. I Matches. mow with scythe altogether.

Now for the profit. I estimate the Liquors. income from good cows at one hundred apiece. This distance from market (ten miles,) wholesale prices and sold at the door; nearly double that marketed and retailed yourself. Extra cows considerable more, from one hundred and twenty-five to one Sherry wine, Native wine &c., for Medica hundred and fifty dollars apiece. I purposes.
25 cases Champaign and Sparkling Ca other such, twenty-nine acres lying near the house, six in pasture, three For Sale. not yet reclaimed,) I affirm and I SHEET GUM, & GUM BELTING think modestly, that I could cut A full assortment. sixty tons per year, one and one half SUNDRIES, SUNDRIES, during the summer. Now isn't the SPICES, way plain, modest, sure? For when grass in moist places fails, all else will have failed before it, and there is a famine.

To be sure, there are operations that tickle the fancy more; here is a lars worth of grapes from half an acre, or another that I heard of yesterday in -, that netted clear of all expense, fourteen hundred dollars from eneumbers and celery on threefrom encumbers and celery on three fourths of an acre, or you may pock et a hundred dollars on a little patch of turnips, cabbages or squashes.—

Are we all, because of these strokes of luck or wisdom, to pull up stakes and devote all to celery and strawberries, or grapes and cabbages?—

No wisdom or luck in that.
